

CHICAGO – Yesterday, U.S. Representative Mike Quigley (IL-05) decided to see for himself if, as the saying goes, making sausage was like making laws when he toured and worked at the Vienna Beef headquarters on Chicago's north side. The visit was part of his Undercover Congressman program, where Quigley works alongside 5th district constituents to better understand their daily lives and concerns.

"To be frank, I relish the opportunity to work alongside my neighbors at our great local businesses," Quigley quipped. "In all seriousness though, rolling up my sleeves and encountering firsthand what companies and employees face every day is more valuable than any memo, because I never forget these experiences."

Quigley met with Vienna Beef Chief Executive Officer Jim Bodman, Vice President of Marketing Tom Pierce, and dozens of employees as he toured the company's manufacturing and distribution headquarters at Damen and Fullerton Avenues. Quigley also donned a hairnet and hopped behind the counter in the Vienna Beef Factory Store & Café, where he helped make sandwiches for the lunch crowd.

Mike usually prefers to ride his bike to meetings, but this might be an interesting way to travel as well!

As an “ Undercover Congressman ,” Quigley has worked with several local organizations delivering mail and pizzas, assembling pinball machines at the Stern pinball factory, assisting guests at a veterans hospital and food pantry, spending the day as a zookeeper at the Lincoln Park Zoo, and picking up garbage and recycling with the Department of Streets and Sanitation, among other jobs.

Quigley’s “Undercover Congressman” program was recently featured in Roll Call and has previously appeared in the
